Communities across Canada are at a turning point.

Decisions about housing, transportation, energy, and climate resilience will shape the places where we live, work, and do business for decades to come.

We already know a great deal about what works. The opportunity now lies in translating proven approaches into projects, policies, and investments that can deliver impact at scale.

The question is no longer what to do, but how to do it at the scale and pace this moment requires.

How do we scale proven climate solutions?

Connecting the Dots 2027 explores the partnerships, investments, and practical approaches that help move proven solutions into broader practice.

The Symposium

Connecting the Dots is a one-day national symposium focused on the practical realities of scaling climate solutions.

Through keynote presentations, case studies, panel discussions, and facilitated discussion, participants will explore how proven approaches can be adapted, replicated, and expanded in communities across Canada.

Who you'll meet:

- Municipal decision makers
- Housing providers
- Utilities and energy organizations
- Researchers and academic institutions
- Community organizations
- Industry and implementation partners

A unique opportunity to connect with the people planning, funding, delivering, and supporting climate resilience across Canada.
